FAQ:

What specific qualifications or prerequisites are needed for participants before enrolling in the course?

There are no strict prerequisites, but participants should have a background in law, social work, psychology, humanitarian work, or public policy.

How long is each day's session, and is there a total number of hours required for the entire course?

Each day's session lasts 4½ hours. The course spans 5 days, totaling 20½ hours.

What's the difference between restorative justice and traditional victim services?

Traditional services often focus on compensation and punishment, while restorative justice emphasizes healing, reconciliation, and active victim participation in justice processes.

How This Course is Different from Other Victimology Courses:

This course blends academic rigor with hands-on field practice, using key texts such as Victimology: The Essentials, Justice for Victims, and The Handbook of Restorative Justice. Unlike programs that are heavily theory based, this course emphasizes practical tools, interactive simulations, and real case studies from humanitarian contexts.

-It aims not only to inform but also to equip participants with tangible skills in crime victim support training, trauma informed advocacy, and policy development. With a special focus on international comparative frameworks, including UN and ICRC guidelines, this program prepares professionals to work across borders and in transitional justice settings.

Participants gain exposure to restorative justice models, psychological support systems, and digital victimization prevention—making this course globally relevant, impact-driven, and survivor-centered.
